

When you post, don't say things like, "Click here to visit my website" or "Buy here."

Asking people directly to visit your link doesn't work.

You might have a lot of upvotes, but no one will buy because they know you're just trying to sell something.

People will leave negative comments, downvote your post, or even report you.

Don't do it!

Instead, offer something valuable first, like I've mentioned this before.

Think of creative ways to give something away that sparks interest!

This example post is specific to my service, and my payoff will come later, if you think about it.

If I deliver on my promise, I'll have someone paying me for months to come.

Your service may be different, so you really have to think outside the box about what you could offer.

I also offer other services, such as building landing pages or reviewing and optimizing websites for conversions.

Additionally, I offer 1-on-1 mentorship.

These are the kinds of things you can offer if you're skilled in this niche.

So how did I make $4k in 2 days?

I used the exact same strategy.

I offered to build e-commerce stores for free.

Why? Because I knew I could sell other services to those clients later.

When I got them on the phone, I asked, "Do you just want me to build your store, or would you like me to teach you about e-commerce with 1-on-1 mentorship?"

One guy said, "I want both — build the store and teach me."

And just like that, I made $3k from one person and $1k from another person the next day.

So, I offer value first by giving something for free.

I build the website, and I show them I'm an expert in my field.

It doesn't take me long to build the website, and once they see it, they're like, "This guy is legit."

Then, I hop on the phone with them again and upsell other services, like running their ads or offering mentorship.

To do this successfully, you also need to show proof.

For this example, you should be able to show proof of sales or websites you've built.

Even if you're a seller on Fiverr or Upwork, this works everywhere.

Let's say you have a gig where you make video ads.

If you're good at what you do and they like your work, tell them, "I also offer advertising services." Then, show proof of your results and hop on a call with them.

That's how you make more money.

Don't just sell something for $15 once and leave it at that.

Instead, use that $15 gig as your way to get your foot in the door, then sell them what you actually want to sell.

If you want to promote affiliate offers, I've found it works best if you post about a solution to a problem.

For example, I had hair loss in the past, and I used Minoxidil and a derma roller.

I took some pictures and after a couple of months, my hair grew back.

I shared my experience in a post, and people started asking where I bought the derma roller.

So, I added the affiliate link for the derma roller, and I'm still making money from that post to this day, even though it was years ago.

Offering a solution to a problem works really well for affiliate marketing!

Making your post and buying upvotes is the easy part.

What happens after is where a lot of people go wrong.

Even many sellers on BlackHatWorld don't know what they're doing.

Recently, I wanted to hire someone for email marketing to generate leads.

Email marketing isn't my thing, so I needed someone who knows how to get results.

A lot of people just comment on my post, "I can help you," but then they don't reach out to me.

This is how you miss out on making money.

Some did, but when I spoke with them, I just didn't trust them.

They didn't make me feel comfortable, and they were just in "selling mode."

One guy did it extremely poorly.

He just said, "This is my pricing," without explaining anything.

I told him straight up, "We're not a good fit."

Eventually, one person came along and said, "I'll get you paying customers for your software, and you can pay me afterward."

When I heard that, I was sold.

Then I got on Google Meet with him, and he showed me some live campaigns.

I felt like I was talking to an expert.

He shared a campaign that generated $150k in leads for one of his clients, so I really felt confident about working with him.

Currently, I'm working with him.

You see the difference?

We can both compete for the same customer, but if you do a poor job, they'll just go to someone else.

If you've ever done door-to-door sales, you might notice that one person gets all the sales while the rest are thinking, "How is he doing it?"

Well, the approach is different from yours.

Even when I'm doing e-commerce, the way to get people to buy is by offering a good deal.

In the past, I sold Pest Repeller devices.

Here's how I structured the bundle:

- Get 1 for $24.99
- Get 2 + 1 FREE for $49.99 (Most Popular)
- Get 4 + 2 FREE for $69.99

Almost everyone would go for the second option.

This is a good offer, or a "Buy 1, Get 1 FREE" deal.

I just want to give you more examples so you can truly understand the power of having a good offer.
