

I mean you don't want to post on the hour or on the half hour because there's an increased amount of competition because so many people are scheduling their posts at those times.

So instead if I say post from 9am to 11AM which by the way is the first best time to be posting don't post at 9am exactly, post at 9:02am or post at 9:12am or post at 9:32am because this is going to decrease the amount of competition that you're seeing on Instagram and it's going to help you get more views.

The two other best times to be posting are from 1 to 3 P.M and then 7 to 10 p.m.

Like I said the time that you're posting is going to make a big difference.

Now before I share with you exactly how many times you should be posting on Instagram a day I need to make sure that you're also doing another thing right.

if you go and scroll the reels feed right now eventually you will see a template pop up.

It'll look like all black of a screen and then it'll have three different posts.

it'll say use this template.

Essentially it's going to give you a sound and it's going to give a post type that is trending.

I strongly suggest you guys begin implementing this.

Instagram is literally telling you that they're pushing out content that has that sound or that has that template.

You would be an idiot to ignore this and it's something that I strongly recommend you do.

In fact I think once a day you should be posting one of those templates because it's going to help you get more views.

it's going to really easily show you what is actually trending.

so when you click into that you can see all the other posts that are working.

you can see the topics, you can see the formats, you can see the hook that they use and that is what you need to be taking into account because one of the things that I see so many creators mess up on Instagram right now is they're not actually posting the right content.

They're not posting the type of things that do well on Instagram.

Either one they're posting way too many photos

Two, they're posting content that is just way too long when Instagram is prioritizing short form content right now.

Again your Instagram algorithm is just a dumbed down version of the YouTube and Tik Tok algorithm.

YouTube and Tick Tock really care about watch time but they also will push out a video to 30-60 seconds long if it gets a good amount of watch time.

Instagram's algorithms is not that smart.

so what you want to do is to create shorter videos so they can get higher watch time and then your content is going to get pushed out more than everybody else's content.

Way too many of you are just having long-winding conversations on Instagram that is one of the reasons that you're not successful.

Another thing that I see so many creators doing is they're telling people to go to the link in the Bio

I would suggest you do not do this on Instagram the reason being, Instagram isn't going to push out content in which you say something like that.

It would actually do way better is if you tell them to DM you something because this is to do two things.

one, it's going to cause engagement.

two, you could just tell them to comment the word below because again it's going to cause engagement.

Anyway remember that the biggest signal that Instagram wants to see is that somebody clicked on your profile and went to your profile.

But telling them to go to the link in your bio is actually something that Instagram is going to suppress.

If instead you tell them to DM you they'll still take that same action but they won't be leaving Instagram because at the end of the day Instagram wants to keep people on Instagram.

That's why you can shop on Instagram and you could do all these things on Instagram.

That's exactly why they don't want you telling people to go to the link in your bio.
